

Col. William C. Newman, Army Intelligence Expert

Col. William C. Newman, an Army intelligence specialist, died of a liver and kidney ailment Monday at Kimbrough Army Hospital at Ft. George G. Meade.

Col. Newman, who was 52, was chief of the U.S. Army Security Agency liaison group at Ft. Meade.

Born in Tuscaloosa, Ala., Col. Newman graduated from the University of Alabama and joined the Army shortly afterward.

From 1948 to 1951 he was chief of the Middle East branch of Army Intelligence in Washington.

His other military assignments included service as attache at the U.S. Embassy in Afghanistan; assistant chief of staff at headquarters of the Army Security Agency in Arlington; commander of the Vint Hill Farm Station in Warrenton, and commander of Kagnew Station in Asmara, Ethiopia.

The family requests that in lieu of flowers expressions of sympathy be in the form of contributions to the American Cancer Society.